FRIDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1915.

This is a world of discontent. Andrew Carnegie says it is one of his life regrets that he didn't become a newspaperman. And a million or so newspapermen are suffering the pangs of regret because they didn't become steel magnates.

Canadian canning companies are doing a big business in supplying evaporated vegetables for the soldiers. In view of the horses and boats that have been supplied, for the soldiers is it unreasonable to suggest that somebody should be detailed to see what sort of vegetables they use?

Criticism having convinced the Government that a soldier who has not sufficiently recovered from his wounds to be able to earn a living should not be turned adrift to beg for a living, the question is, does any soldier, may he assure, for our returning heroes the right to ocean passage in quarters more comfortable and healthier than a steerage compartment?

The Calgary Herald, acting in the interest of the whole Canadian people," "demands of the British war authorities that they shall bring to an end the constant criticism that is being made of them" by prosecuting the war "with such vigor and initiative as will satisfy every reasonable critic that the British cause is humanly attempted to be left undone to quickly compass the end most desired. As things are to the man on the street it seems as if the war was to be waged all the way to the moon, altogether too far—much farther than is or would be really necessary if men with initiative were on the job at headquarters." For which it seems to be up to Mr. Southam's Edmonton paper to arrange, try, and hang Mr. Southam's Calgary paper on a charge of high treason.

Having unearthing a few horse deals in Ontario of the usual kind, Commissioner Davidson is taking another rest, with no intention of returning until after Christmas. It seems to be accepted that the commissioner needs a three weeks rest after each three-day spasm of inquiry. Considering the character of the exposures he has made, the recent insertions of the probe in new places three weeks may not be an unnecessary time to allow the commissioner to recover the judicial poise necessary to do his part of the future proceedings. If he employs this time trying to find language to properly describe the newly discovered transactions three weeks does not seem too long to devote to the job. But if anything is to be done, the time is now. The talk and a bad smell the report of the commissioner ought to be in the hands of Parliament at the coming session. At the present rate of progress there is little chance of that. The only inquiry is to be stopped short before having covered the ground. The prospect is that either there will be no more investigating done or that Parliament will get nothing more at the coming session than an interim report that it may expect the real report when it gets

So far as can be gathered from their editorial columns, the newspaper friends of the Government believe that the wheat war was a stroke of statesmanship and unanimously wondering what on earth it was done for.

At the risk of incurring again the patriotic censure of the Journal, this paper has to admit that buying fifteen-year-old mares at $165 per is another phase of the Government's war policy in which it is unable to discern the Imperial advantage.

Sir Richard McBride knows when to quit. Having squandered the resources of British Columbia until there is nothing left to squander he has appointed himself agent general of the province in an attempt to make a fortune, salary, and expenses to let him go to the taxpayers to pull themselves out of bankruptcy all best he can.

Montreal Herald. With the news that Australia has just launched her first aircraft carrier, the other naval building yards are racing to catch up. Edward Blake complained of an auto race between a Frenchman and a Britisher for participation in the last memorable Imperial conference when Sir William Laurier was in attendance. We are here disposed to believe that the government has not been so far behind in the wheat trade on its own account. Having decided to stop wheat, it is time to start again.

Carryon Herald. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in a talk with his own people, has a clear right to demand that the government act and antedate the document seventeen months. That at least would put the international relations on an understandable basis, and give the United States legal right to fight back.

The Ottawa press bureau has served notice that when Parliament resumes the government will be demand for an extension of time, and if the Opposition do not agree to this dissolution of Parliament it is to be made at once and an election called. That, likely enough, is the program. The thing the Government did not let allow to them is to help it is a discussion of the war graft on the eve of an election. If the Opposition will not give them leave to do this, then the government will have to come to an agreement with the opposition to allow the war graft to be voted on.

Montreal Gazette. It was not surprising. Whatever the German people are suffering behind the lines of their ruler, the Germans are suffering behind the German ruler's nose. No strong power concerned in the conflict feels that the German government has done its duty for a display of liberality on the part of the Allies. The only initiative steps for reform will probably come so slowly that the head of the British fund movement.

Toronto Saturday Night. As for the government in Roger and his name, in the program pending, it is difficult to carry out a valuable investigation.

Replies to inquiries were received from men of all walks of life, mostly with the resultant sentence that the government was the Tory party in the provinces.

Hon. Ross has lost a great deal of face with the public, especially for Quebec, the Tories quirk.

Montreal Evening Post—Germany has a hundred American hospitals by arrangement, mostly upon the interest of land and sea. She has no desire to interfere with the neutrality of Britain for the neutrality of Britain.

She has placed an expeditionary force in France, but has not yet every hostile purpose.

Montreal Star. So much refuge in our harbors after violating our rights on the high seas, after defeating us in the war, after defeating America's friends, the Germans have had never seen before, waged on a scale never before heard of. In the earlier stages, when the Germans were driving furiously, and when the fighting was open, the Germans were the ones fighting as he knew how to fight, and nobody has ever suggested that he did not fight from Mons to the Marne and back again with splendid skill. But when the armies began to dig themselves in, he less to him—it was a positive handicap. A man near the three score and ten mark cannot slough the required instincts and habits of a lifetime to start to live in a different way with youthful enthusiasm and quickness. Sir John's work was done when the German rush was stopped, and for his part in that he deserves the thanks of all people for all time.

CHRISTMAS BURDEN. The burden of forced giving. 'Tis a bore.

And you must be done, as well you know. You check your Christmas list up.

Applied to see how many gifts.

You must give gratis a costly blue-bean.

Because you gave that face fair last year.

And some greeting choice will do.

These be the things that mar our Christmas.

The burden of family party. Why do relatives expect to come, that day?

Aunt Mary observes with cold eye the household gods you modestly display.

Though merry that you tactfully How ill it eat and awkward they appear.

Until your eyes are ready to give way.

These be the things that mar our Christmas cheer.

Friends, though you know that all we said is true, To the customs still we must adhere.

All the above-named foolishness we'll do.

These be the things that mar our Christmas cheer.
